PERSPECTIVE by Jon Heaton, Tribune editor

George thought about it and decided he doesn't need any help...

This week, both the President and VP Cheney went on a publicity blitz to convince us that we are "good people" who have decided to be losers.

Speaking with Jim Lehrer in a prerecorded interview for his Tuesday evening newscast, Bush said he has concluded that (1) there were not enough troops in Iraq or Baghdad to keep the people safe, and (2) we have allowed the new Iraqi government to have veto power over which insurgents and militias we could confront, engage, and capture or destroy.

George stated these factors as conditions for which neither he nor any other particular person in our government is responsible. These failures, according to him, just grew out of the mist and then, after our November election, became very obvious to him.

However, he stated that his decisions on Iraq have nothing to do with the election. In this one statement, we must agree he is correct because he has not changed his policy in any way.

George has done just one thing: he replaced Donald Rumsfeld with Robert Gates as Secretary of Defense. And Robert Gates told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that he intends to add about 90,000 troops to the Army and Marines over the next five years. This is all the change this President will make.

The Bush-Cheney Gang (the Neocons who hold our government and our military hostage for another year and a half) has once again concluded that they were right all along and that their only problem is a failure to properly "educate" the American public as to the reasons we must accept their policies. This is why Bush and Cheney are so anxious to be interviewed by the media right now.

Regardless of the questions put to them, these two men stick to the same misinformation they used in 2002 and 2003 to get us to let them attack Iraq plus the lies they have used ever since to stay in Iraq:

Untruth 1: Saddam Hussein had to be removed. He was a cancer to his people and to his neighbors. He was plotting with Al Qaeda to destroy the U.S.

Fact: Hussein was a dictator. He used all the tools of a tyrant to manipulate the ethnic, religious and tribal hatreds of his citizens to achieve a state of relative civil order among them.

Fact: Hussein had nothing to do with Al Qaeda because he didn't trust them. He saw Ben Laden as a religious/ethnic troublemaking zealot.

Fact: Hussein's Iraq was a buffer against Iran which we have reduced to impotence, leaving the area wide open to hostile adventures by both Iran and Syria, as well as a training ground for crazy young militants from throughout the Muslim world.

Untruth 2: If we don't stay and "win," Al Qaeda will get a foothold in Iraq from which to launch more attacks on us here at home.

Fact: Al Qaeda had no presence in Iraq until our occupation there was so ill-planned and ill-managed that we left the country wide open to all manner of insurgents, criminals, and religious/ethnic crazies.

Untruth 3: Things were going very well in Iraq up through 2005 as the result of us planting the seeds of democracy and holding free elections.

Fact: We organized the elections so that each voter could simply vote for his or her tribal boss, making the elections just a confirmation of the status quo. No individual evaluation of candidates was possible in such a medieval society, but the Bush Gang glossed over this, pretending democracy and civil order was always just another election away.

Untruth 4: The Bush White House considered all the suggestions of the Iraq Study Group and of various members of Congress. These people are good people, but they made no suggestions for a victory. Defeat is not an option, so it was determined that we must continue to win by doing more of what we have done so far.

Fact: The Bush Gang considered the November vote for a change in Iraq. They decided there was no alternative course or strategy which would be an improvement to what they were already doing.

Fact: They concluded that, while casualties have been historically far fewer than anyone could expect, they would be considered cruel and callous to state that publicly. Therefore, they decided to continue playing the patriotism card to maintain support for our troops, allowing the Gang to hide behind the jingoism they perpetuate.

Untruth 5: To redeploy would be a disgrace and cause an unimaginable bloodbath among the Iraqi tribes and schisms. Therefore, we choose to beef up our presence in Baghdad and require the new Iraqi government to impose law and order there and in other trouble spots, or else.

Fact: We are already presiding over a bloodbath with just about all the troops we can muster. No temporary surge of our presence in Baghdad will keep the lid on the violence we have unleashed there, but we don't have enough troops to rotate systematically and continuously at anywhere near the strength needed.

Fact: The Iraqi government is so factionalized and constitutionally flawed that no promise its officials make can be honored. Our surge of troops in Baghdad will be followed by a further breakdown in civil order there.

Fact: The Bush Gang miscalculates the damage our presence in Iraq has caused and will keep on causing. Only absolute military rule (dictatorship) would bring law and order to that country in a short time. We don't have the manpower, weapons, or wealth sufficient to impose such absolute military rule. So if he wants to look like a winner, Bush will probably agree secretly to sideline the Iraqi parliament and support an Iraqi dictatorship which can ruthlessly impose order. Bush could say it was necessary to hold Iran at bay.

Untruth 6: We don't favor compulsory military service. We can depend on our professional military to meet all our defense needs.

Fact: The Bush Gang knows the voters would not have supported the Iraq fiasco if their young people had been drafted to fight there. True, a professional army is better trained and thus more effective. But when the going gets rough or top leadership is obviously incompetent, professional military do not reenlist at a rate sufficient to sustain needed manpower. For the same reason, recruitment has been more difficult and expensive. This is why Bush Gang's operations in Iraq and Afghanistan have been below the strength needed to maintain control of each situation.

The Bush Gang has tried to compensate by paying Iraqis to serve in their new country's military. However, these mercenaries have more reason to be loyal to their ethnic and tribal bosses, so they take the U.S. money but are virtually useless.

Bush and Cheney cannot admit that they failed to expand the military four years ago when it would have been easy because lots of Americans were scared. They can't admit it because they would be admitting they underestimated the deadly, overwhelming difficulty of occupying and pacifying Iraq. They would be admitting that they have been overconfident and incompetent all along the way.

The Bush Gang hopes to keep up its public relations attack on the American voter long enough to dump the whole problem on the next President or the Congress. The Bush Gang doesn't respect any outsider, doesn't trust any outsider, and certainly won't change its dream of absolute world domination for any outsider. From their point of view, they are winners and anyone who disagrees is a loser. They consider any idea short of a bullet or a bomb a sign of cowardly weakness.

This government has gone so far now that even impeachment is not a solution. If Bush were removed, Cheney would be more deadly. And while the removals were crawling through Congress, things would probably get worse in Iraq and Afghanistan, and then Bush's term of office would be over.

Advice to members of Congress: Your country is in deep trouble because of cynical, arrogant, duplicitous incompetents. If you're already plotting to be the next President, we don't need you. Build a solid, bipartisan coalition beginning with the recommendations and continuing advice of the Iraq Study Group. I would love to see the Demcats make a comeback, but I'd rather be proud of their service for the common good. jfh
