into the air by pollution sources; rather, it is formed when emissions of other pollutants like nitrogen oxides (NOx) and volatile organic compounds (VOCs) react with sunlight. These “precursor” pollutants are emitted by a variety of man-made and natural sources, including oil and gas operations, power plants and vehicles. Even smaller sources, such as home lawn and garden equipment, smaller engines and combustion sources and paints and household chemicals, contribute pollutants that lead to ground-level ozone.

Exposure to elevated ozone concentrations can trigger a variety of health problems, including chest pain, coughing, throat irritation and reduced lung function. Ozone can worsen symptoms associated with respiratory conditions and diseases such as asthma, bronchitis and emphysema, and can permanently damage lung tissue.

Those most at risk from ozone exposure include children, people with asthma and other respiratory diseases, the elderly and people active outdoors.

Colorado currently is involved in a number of clean air initiatives, including efforts around the recently announced federal Clean Power Plan. Colorado is recognized as a leader in significantly reducing air pollutant emissions based upon previous actions such as the adoption of the nation's first Renewable Energy Standard (2004), the passage of the Clean Air Clean Jobs Act (2010), the Regional Haze Plan (2012) and revisions to oil and gas regulations (2014).

These efforts already are significantly reducing NOx emissions through the retirement of older coal-fired electric generating units, the conversion of others to natural gas and the addition of advanced pollution controls.

10 Warning Signs of Alzheimer's Disease

It may be hard to know the difference between age-related changes and the first signs of Alzheimer's disease. To help identify problems early, the Alzheimer's Association created a list of warning signs for Alzheimer's disease. Individuals may experience one or more of these in different degrees.

- Memory loss that disrupts daily life.
- Challenges in planning or solving problems.
- Difficulty completing familiar tasks at home, at work or at leisure.
- Confusion with time or place.
- Trouble understanding visual images and spatial relationships.
- New problems with words in speaking or writing.
- Misplacing things and losing the ability to retrace steps.
- Decreased or poor judgment.
- Withdrawal from work or social activities.
- Changes in mood and personality.

If you notice any of these signs, please see a doctor.
